No specific mental health services or programs, but the organisation has made adjustments for mental health consumers 4. None of the above
Intro to OC questions	Just a reminder that when we are talking about the support provided to consumers; we are talking only about support provided to adult consumers with a mental health condition. You may remember completing our online survey last year about the support your CMO provides to address the health behaviours of consumers with a mental health condition accessing your CMO. One of the key findings from the survey was that the level of support provided to consumers differed by health behaviours. As such, we would like to further explore what type of support is being provided for each behaviour separately. These health behaviours include: tobacco smoking, nutrition, alcohol consumption, physical activity and sleep. I will also ask you about what allows your organisation to provide this support. I will ask you to think about things at an organisational level and a staff level. An organisation level include things that operate from the top-down. These could be things at a senior management level that impact the support provided to address health behaviours. This could include things like developing action plans and goals for the organisation regarding health behaviour support or planning and conducting evaluations of the support provided for example. Staff level refers to things that operate on a day to day level. Including managerial and other staff, including peer workers. This can include things like staff having access to information and resources around providing preventive	N/A
