Message from the Guest Editors

The field of fermented food and beverages is becoming increasingly important, not only because of the growing demand of the market pushed by more exigent consumers. In this regard, research is focusing on a more effective and safe microbial role in the human health.

Until now, the role of yeasts was simply related to carrying out fast and safe processes. However, today, research is turning towards the study of what yeasts can confer to food and beverages, beyond their purely technological role. Indeed, there has been great progress investigating the role of yeast in organoleptic quality of product, health-promoting compounds and probiotic activity.

Our goal is to publish original papers or reviews to contribute to the knowledge on fermented food and beverages where yeasts contribute to ensuring the organoleptic qualities of the product but also serve to enhance the nutraceutical characteristics and/or and to make products with high added value.
