Message from the Guest Editors

The last 4–5 years have ushered in a new era in acute myeloid leukemia therapy, with the advent and approval of multiple targeted therapies. Additionally, an improved understanding of the immune system in patients with hematologic malignancies has resulted in major progress in the development of immune therapies for the treatment of patients with AML.

The numerous ongoing trials evaluating these novel therapies, with well-designed correlative interrogations of the immune system in patients treated in such trials, will further enhance our understanding of immune therapies as single-agent and combination approaches for the treatment of AML.

This Special Issue aims to focus on novel agents and their combinations. Focus will be placed on the efficacy of novel therapeutics and promising combination approaches to further improve outcomes in the treatment of patients with AML. We welcome the submission of original research articles and reviews.
