Message from the Guest Editors

The aim of this Special Issue is to address this question, gathering insights from scholars and practitioners that can help organizations to face this difficult time and complex working landscape generated by the coronavirus crisis. We look for original contributions that nurse the discussion and propose a novel understanding of the changes in the way of working that any private, public, and social organization has to face to survive, to protect its sustainability, and to reframe its value creation mechanisms. Countries' and organizations' crisis-response efforts are in full motion, and scholars must contribute to understanding how the way of working is changed and what will never be as it was previously.
