Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Cardiac imaging is experiencing a continuous evolution driven by technical advances allowing to diagnose cardiac diseases like cardiac amyloidosis or Fabry Disease with the opportunity of new specific treatment strategies.

Furthermore detailed information gained by cardiac imaging is needed for planning and guiding new interventional technologies like percutaneous valve repair or complex percutaneous coronary interventions.

Enthusiastic scientists will present new imaging technologies used in special cardiac diseases. This issue highlights the impact of cardiac imaging in the context of new therapeutic strategies in different cardiac diseases.
