Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Tropical diseases caused by protozoan parasites – such as Trypanosoma cruzi, Trypanosoma brucei, Leishmania spp. or Plasmodium spp., among others – affect million of people worldwide, causing more than a million human deaths and disabilities annually and high economic and social burden.

Many current drugs to combat these diseases have several disadvantages such as limited efficacy, severe side effects, requirement for long treatment periods, development of resistance, and high cost. Therefore, the search for new drugs and therapeutic strategies to combat these pathogens are urgently required.

Authors are kindly invite to submit original papers, communications and reviews regarding drug design, drug discovery, drug delivery, pharmacokinetics, pharmacodinamics and related topics, to be published in this Special Issue of Pharmaceutics.
