The goal of this Special Issue is to present the latest advances in the field of pharmacometrics enhanced by artificial intelligence (AI), with the ultimate aim to further improve drug discovery and development as well as personalized medicine.

Pharmacometrics and quantitative systems pharmacology plays a vital role in the development of new drugs and personalized medicine. With the current scientific advancements, increasingly vast amounts of medical data become available, which we believe creates attractive opportunities for computationally more efficient methods such as AI technologies.

For this research topic, we welcome original research, reviews, and opinion letters on AI-enabled pharmacometrics. Both technical and clinical implementation research falls within the scope.
