Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Many cities and towns around the world which were once grappling with the consequences of overtourism are now looking for ways of recovering and rebuilding in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. While significant progress has been made in understanding the nature of sustainable tourism development, there still remains a number of important issues to be resolved. Therefore, this Special Issue of Sustainability welcomes contributions from researchers on the general theme of sustainable development of the city's tourism, and in particular, suggested topics for this Special Issue include but are not limited to:

- Models and methods of sustainable destination governance;
- Residents' perceptions and responses to unsustainable urban tourism;
- Sustainable innovations for mature destinations;
- Future proofing and planning for sustainable urban tourism development;
- Indicators for measuring and tracking sustainable urban tourism development;
- Role of local authorities in sustainable urban tourism development;
- Role of de-marketing in achieving sustainable urban tourism development.
