Message from the Guest Editors

Sport-based education programmes teach about environmental sustainability and climate change, promote awareness of environmental protection and preservation, are versatile means of implementation with a global outreach and unprecedented popularity, which build and strengthen multiple networks resulting in partnerships. Sport-based educational programmes implement their own plans and are able to achieve the goals of sustainable development and peace. They can become a link between different sectors to pool resources and create synergies in order to contribute to measuring progress towards sustainable development.

The purpose of this special edition is to examine the interrelationships between Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and how they can be achieved through Physical Activity and Sport. The papers selected for this Special Edition are subject to a rigorous peer review process in order to ensure rapid and wide dissemination of research results, their progress and implementations.
