Message from the Guest Editors

Shared mobility has grown significantly over the past few years as a result of increased commitment to creating more sustainable transportation as well as advances in location-based services, and mobile technologies. To date, several environmental, social, and transportation-related benefits have been reported from the use of shared mobility modes.

This Special Issue aims to bring together theoretical and empirical studies on outcomes of new shared mobility and micromobility devices across urban areas around the world. We invite papers that address a range of topics related to shared mobility and sustainable transportation. We are striving to contribute to the scholarly and practical knowledge relevant to both urban planning and sustainable transportation. Possible topics may include but are not limited to:

- Shared mobility and travel behaviors;
- Shared mobility and air pollution;
- Shared mobility and traffic safety;
- Micromobility impacts on the future of public transport systems.
